

There is a story told about a college-aged gentleman named Griffin. Griffin was pretty good at playing golf, and even taught others how to improve their score playing that sport. One day Griffin invited his friend and neighbor, James, to go to Mount Graham golf course for a few rounds. After a few rounds on the golf course, the conversation went something like this:

GRIFFIN: James, you can greatly improve your golf score if you correct just one major problem that I see that you have.

JAMES: What is that?

GRIFFIN: You always stand way, wayyyyyyyyy too close to the ball after you hit it!
